To whom it may concern

Berlin, January 2015

The European Educational Publishers Group (EEPG) is a non-profit association, representing educational publishers from all over Europe. In the past few years we have closely monitored new political developments. Earlier last year, we were deeply concerned about the previous Bulgarian government's policies concerning the future of educational publishing. We feared that the measurements would endanger the future of quality education in Bulgaria. We expressed our concern in letters, interviews and articles.

We are therefore extremely pleased to learn that the present government in Bulgaria has given some deep thought to creating laws and guidelines. These guidelines will guarantee that every child in Bulgaria gets an adequate education.

The fact that the textbooks and materials used in pre-school, school, vocational and special training have to be created according to guidelines set by the government and educational experts, and are subject to approval by an independent body of assessors will guarantee that there is a variety of materials catering for the different needs of children and students.

Teaching and learning materials will be created for improved curricula and the educational publishers in Bulgaria will strive to meet the guidelines and provide the best materials they can produce, updating and improving them constantly.

The EEPG welcomes the fact that there is going to be a fruitful exchange between all parties involved in education: the ministry of culture, teacher trainers, teachers and parents, as well as publishers and providers of learning materials.

We thank you for your efforts and remain with very best wishes
